

EXTRA!!!! EXTRA!!!!

Ragen Sanner is good at editing!

"Ragen is a special person with a wonderful personality. In times of difficulty, she finds a way to keep her sense of humor. I couldn't work with anyone that I appreciate more."

CHAMPAIGN, IL - Recent reports indicate that Human Kinetics developmental editor Ragen Sanner is highly valued and appreciated by colleagues.

A twelve-year veteran of Human Kinetics, Ragen has earned a reputation among her coworkers as someone who cares deeply about the quality of the projects entrusted to her. She is also considered to be very knowledgeable and well prepared, which enables her to capably lead a diverse team through a smooth publication process, no matter how many bumps appear along the way.

Her creativity has often saved the day when her team has faced dilemmas. As one acquisitions editor put it, "Ragen always comes up with great ideas to solve the problems that come up along the way. When I ask her 'How do you think we should handle this?' I get an answer that sounds good and will work (while keeping to the budgets and schedules)."

People at HK know they can count on Ragen to do her job, and do it well. One executive gushed, "Ragen is unfailingly enthusiastic, and I appreciate her can-do spirit. She's good at developing content, and really improves the editorial quality of the products she works on. She takes 'surprises' in stride. I loved how she took ownership of the fast-track, high-priority SHAPE project and I loved seeing how much pleasure she got from beating the deadlines on it. There were really high expectations for that project, and lots riding on it, and she delivered in fabulous style."

A managing editor continued the praise: "I appreciate her dedication and ability to get things done, even with difficult deadlines. It probably didn't help matters that she was trying to meet those deadlines while the ME assigned to help was still being trained. Therefore she gets an extra bonus appreciation point: Thanks for being patient and understanding! (But stop it with those 60-hour work weeks!)"

Ragen is unanimously considered to be an asset to the well-regarded HPERD Editorial team, who are, according to another executive, "highly professional and respectful of their colleagues in every way and through all methods of communication, remain calm in difficult situations, and are helpful and responsive. In short, I can't say enough good things about them."

HPERD EDITORIAL RULES!!!!!!